To whom it may concern,

I have recently had the privilege of having Kerryn Redpath speak to my Year 9 Physical Education classes about her battle with drugs and alcohol as a young adult. Her story reveals the deceptive nature of experimenting with illicit substances and of the dangers that come with excessive alcohol consumption. As a teacher I found that Kerryn's story added a more "real" element to the content we had been covering in theory classes about drugs, alcohol and teenage risk taking. The students found her story to be compelling and highly engaging as she presented very well with up to date statistics and news articles. At the end of her presentation Kerryn gave opportunity for students to ask questions which proved to be a fantastic platform for students to ask questions of someone who had experience and knowledge in the area.

I would highly recommend Kerryn for presenting in any secondary school as she works very well within the schools timetable, is flexible in the times she can present and truly has a heart for reaching young people with her story.

Regards,

Zac Jeffries
